Senate Unit Maps Bill In Rail Dispute

Committee Begins Job On Legislation

WASHINGTON (AP)-With rail negotiations at an impasse, the Senate Commerce Committee begins work today on legislation to avert a nationwide strike next

Impelled by a new sense of urgency, the committee may be ready with a bill by early afternoon. Chairman Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., planned to confer with Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana to see if the Senate will be ready to take up the measure Friday. If not, the bill will be brought up Mon-

Magnuson said that Rep. Oren Harris, D-Ark., chairman of the House Commerce Committee, had told him the Senate bill should reach the House early next week.

Although it held extensive hearings, the Commerce Committee has been hanging fire on legislation proposed by President Kennedy July 22 to avert a strike. The committee hoped that the carriers and the rail unions, negotiating under the eye of the Labor Department, could settle the fouryear work rules dispute them-

These hopes were dashed Wednesday. Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz said negotiations had broken down and there was no immediate prospect of recondefenseless. MILITARY security still bars full disclosure of what government scientists have developed, but it is known the experts are hard at work on physiochemicals, which affect the body, and psychochemicals, which affect the mind.

The Wall Street Journal reported recently that some of the compounds being developed would incapacitate a foe by sending him into a sort of "dream world of utter depression or witless euphoria."

The value of such a weapon is clear.

One defense strategist explained it this way for the Journal: "If the enemy started a conventional war and swept over a portion of Allied territory, such chemical weapons could be used to swiftly recapture this land, plus some of the enemy's. Then, having the advantage, we could offer to negotiate." THE GOVERNMENT has shown an awareness of the potential of such chemicals by stepping up appropriations for research. Spending in this area has jumped from $6.5 million a year in 1950 to more

Knowing he was defeated, Wallace merely filed his resolutions Wednesday with a perfunctory and comparatively mildly worded explanation of each.

He condemned a Defense Department directive permitting military commanders to declare segregated civilian facilities off limits; the public accommodations section of the civil rights bill; use of National Guardsmen to enforce desegregation; and the planned Aug. 28 march on Washington.

"But we shouldn't devote the whole conference to it," he added.

QUESTION: How can one tell a crocodile from an alligator?

ANSWER: If you can imagine being called upon to judge a contest for world's ugliest beast, you'd appreciate the point of view of the boy in our picture. The alligator is the big, surlylooking brute on the left; the crocodile is the nasty specimen to the right. The picture shows clearly how to tell these creatures apart: the alligator's snout is much wider, rounded at the end; the crocodile's nose, with a more pointed tip, is very narrow for it's length.

We have both an American alligator and an American crocodile-although the latter is found only in the extreme southern part of Florida. The alligator is larger, growing up to 16 feet and is a sluggish animal. While dangerous to man, the alligator is not so much as the crocodile, a faster moving, more vicious creature, even if it is slightly smaller. Crocodiles like warmer, more salty water than alligators. In other parts of the world - India and Africa - crocodiles grow to enormous dimensions - up to 30 feet in length, and are extremely dangerous to human beings.

FOR YOU TO DO: Find out about the special group of reptiles to which the crocodiles and alligators belong in a book on natural history. They are particularly interesting because their history goes so far back.

Billy Vick of Rocky Mount, N. C., wins today's grand prize of a 20-volume World Book Encyclopedia for this question. Mail yours on a postcard to Junior Editors in care of The Review and you too may win a set.
